The focus of the session lay on two foundational emotional needs in early childhood development—belongingness and significance. These core needs, particularly critical during the toddler years (ages 3 to 5), are intricately linked to a child's emerging sense of self-worth, emotional security, and behavioural stability.

Mrs. Anila Arjun eloquently expounded on how fostering a child's sense of connectedness and value within the family and school ecosystem directly influences their emotional intelligence, social adaptability, and intrinsic motivation. The session illuminated the profound impact of emotionally attuned parenting in cultivating an environment where children feel both seen and celebrated.
